By the close vote of 55 to 24 the Cloture resolution was showed our, the Force bill was lef again on a side track and Reapportionment. Was brought before the Senate.

The plans for the movement had been well laid, and the act was accomplished without a break.

The uproar in the Senate when the result was announced was such that Vice-President Morton's gavel was powerless, and in the House the same contusion prevailed when Mr. Rogers arose and interrupted a roll-call to tell was the had been done in the upper chamber.

With the dull perhistence of the Rev. Jasper, who still declared that "the sun do move," Mr. Hoar instated, after the vote was over, that the Force bill was still alive. Other friends of the measure did not share his confidence, however.

With only tweety-nine working days left in the essation, it did not seem possible of probable that either cloture or the infamous bill behind it could be again pushed to the front and the server, and they for another victim. against a motion to again bring up the Force bill?"

"Yes, undoubtedly in its present condition; but I think that the measure is killed and it is beyond the power of resustiatation. There are lots of Republican Senators who are opposed to it, and now that it has once more been side tracked, it will be the hardest work in the world to bring it up again in any shape. I don't think Senator Stanford or any of us will have to go on record on that measure again."

Senator Stanford authorizes the statement that he is in favor of the general principles of the Force bill, but that without the Siewart amendment he would never vote for it. He is also opposed to wasting the time of the Senate in useless detaic, and prefers business legislation to political legislation.
